Global Head of Commodity Derivatives

Amine Bel Hadj Soulami is Global Head of Commodity Derivatives at BNP Paribas London. After completing his secondary education in Morocco and studying at the Ecole Polytechnique in France, he joined BNP Paribas in 1987.

Thanks to his quantitative abilities he was quickly drawn towards financial markets. He started his career as a precious metals options trader in 1990 in Paris and then New York, where he headed up energy options trading (oil and natural gas).

He was then made manager of the Equity Derivatives department in Japan in 1994 and subsequently head of European Equity Derivatives, co-head of global Equity Derivatives, as well as head of Equity Derivatives for the Americas platform.

He has been based in London since 2006, when he was appointed global head of Commodity Derivatives and he is currently managing teams in London, Paris, New York , Tokyo and Singapore.

The Commodity Derivatives business is an area of strong growth for BNP Paribas, which is widely positioned as a leader in the Energy and Commodity sector.
